There are gushing young ladies who, having read David Copperfield, have thereupon sought out a small, long haired dog of nondescript breed, possessed of an irritating habit of criticising a man's trousers, & of finally commenting upon the same by a sniff, indicative of contempt & disgust. They talk sweet foolish poodle to this animal (when there is anyone near enough to overhear them), & they kiss its NOSE, & put its unwashed head up against their cheek in a most touching manner; though I have noticed that these caresses are principally performed when there are young men hanging about.
